plans for the spring; but there is one thing of which we can assure the ladies. The bonnets for the coming season will not be increased in size, although the trimming may be more elaborate and costly than their predecessors. The charming, convenient and coquettish little street dresses will be fashioned in a still more attractive style, and the cloaks will undergo many and material changes. In Paris, the ladies have converted themselves into animated flowers, and the most attractive is the daisy, with petal basques of silver cloth and skirts of green satia leaves, and the fan, with pointed satin folds and perle de coque ornaments. The skirt of promise is azure blue gauze, sprinkled over with buds and bursting woodland flowerets. The black swan furnishes the newest costume, although there is little to recommend it in either a fashionable or ornithological point of view. The Parisian belles are returning to the era of edifices of false hair, which we hope will not find favor in America. It is a cheering sign of the taste and independence of ladies on this side of the Atlantic to find that all the imported fashions have to be considerably modified before they will be accepted. The opening of the spring season will undoubtedly show a great revolu-tion in regard in Paris fashions.—N. Y. Her-
